The photograph is of a young woman. Her hair is long and wavy, and she is wearing a white shirt. The photograph is taken indoors, possibly in a room. The lighting is soft, creating a gentle ambiance. The woman is smiling warmly, giving a sense of warmth and friendliness. The background is blurred, focusing attention on her. The photograph captures a moment of happiness and joy.

As a rule, the smoked pork was the only pork that was served. The smoked pork was always a favorite, and it was served with a variety of sides such as baked beans, coleslaw, and pickles. The pork was slow-cooked for hours, giving it a deliciously tender texture. The pork was often served with a side of cornbread, which was a staple dish at the Passafaro family gatherings.
